PERFORMANCE CREATIVE, OPTIMIZING ASSETS ACCORDING TO CHANNEL

Our client is a leading online sportsbook in the USA. We worked with them to test display assets specifically for Reddit.

The objective was to test if ‘Redditor’ friendly creative eg using humor such as memes would perform better than ‘standard’ creative.

Ensuring creative is appropriate for the channel audience is essential to meeting objectives and developing test & learn creative campaigns is something our creative teams are well versed in developing across clients.

Campaign: Q3 2021

A 'REDDITOR' FRIENDLY APPROACH

WHAT WE DID

The purpose was to test if content developed specifically for Reddit performed better than 'standard' brand content.

x6 versions of display ads were developed to be tested against a control ad.

The tests were significantly significant in their findings.

WHAT WE LEARNED

Two of the creatives performed better than the control.

These two creatives were the most colorful and outwardly humorous ads, which could attribute to the higher CTR.

The poorest performing creative was text heavy and did not have a clear CTA. Hypothesis, users may need more information about the advertised product.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Use creative with a focus on visuals and that are not text heavy.

For a Reddit audience, consider humorous creative to drive engagement. If an ad entertains the user, then CTR may be higher. Continue to explore ways to humour the audience, which seems to resonate with Reddit users.

Include product description and a CTA.

HIGHER CONVERSION THAN CONTROL

Our hypothesis was that branded content was not resonating with Redditors and meme-based content would perform better.

Testing new built meme-based ads against our control unit (right) proved this to be correct.

All meme themed content out-performed the control with the strongest performing creative (top right) resulting in 17% higher conversion.
